

One Day in the Life of Colin and Celt, the Great Half-brother Kings of the American Turf To-Day

How the Keene Stable Winners Are Watched and Trained for Their Work.

CARE, BUT NOT LUXURY.

Two Horses as Regular in Feed and Exercise as Are Trainer Rowe and His Assistants.

There were lively doings at James R. Keene's stable in Sheephead Bay this morning around 7 o'clock. Jimmy Rowe, the trainer, came cantering in on his little roan pony, black stable boys seemed to come in a swarm from all parts of the long, low, rakish structure; then Green, the superintendent, rushed out, giving a dozen orders in one breath; even the dogs barked with more than wasted excitement, and a lonely black and white goat nibbled at a bale of straw and regarded the scene with more than usual interest.

Colin and Celt, the crown jewels of the thirty-six horses in training in the Keene stable, had just come in together from their morning exercise, and were ready for their rub-down and breakfast. Colin, the winner of the Belmont and nearly $300,000, seemed more eager, more spirited than his half-brother, and as he raised his head, probed his ears, lifted his front one, then the other of his slender, bandaged legs, all the while sniffing with his delicate nostrils the oats and fresh clover of his breakfast, there was not a line, not a detail of his splendid body that did not suggest the type ideal of the thoroughbred horse.

Down jumped Myers, the writhen who does most of the routine exercising of Colin; down came "Chief," the colored boy who performs that office with Celt; there was a snapping of buckles, off came saddles and bridles, a splashing of cold water, and the two great horses, surrounded by a circle of peering black faces, were attended at their baths with as much luxury and care as was ever bestowed upon any aristocratic athlete in the Baths of Caracalla.

The Little Roan Guide.

"They breezed that mile in forty-nine easy," said Jimmy Rowe when he had turned the roan pony over to a stable boy. That roan, by the way, is a sort of platonic affinity for both Colin and Celt. He is many years older than either, but he always trots along side by side when either goes to race, and his presence, like that of an old friend, seems to have a soothing effect. He is known on all Eastern race tracks, but has no name, and is just "the roan pony"—a chubby, dignified, self-contained beast, with a peculiar mission in life; for he has known the companionship of the great Synoby, now that of the two sovereign three-year-olds, and is liable to play guide, philosopher and friend to many other top notables yet unborn.

"Jew's that cut!" asked Rowe, for Colin was struck from behind in the Belmont, and the trainer looks over every inch of his and Celt's body after each day's exercise. "Doing fine," says Tom Green, lifting the hind leg of the horse, from which the bandages have been removed. The cut didn't amount to much, but kept Colin in his stall for several days after the race. There isn't a scratch on Celt, and his chestnut coat shimmered as the sponges in the hands of Finch, his attendant, kept it dripping with cool water. Finch is as black as an Egyptian night, and so is Baldorf, who attends exclusively to Colin, and as they sponge and scrape away at their charges, using a flat, fish-like utensil like a paper-plate for the scraping, they glance at each other jealously, and then at Rowe and Green as if for approval.

"They get away with about eleven quarts of oats around corn and fresh clover a day," said Mr. Rowe. "Colin does a day," said Mr. Rowe. "Colin is the heartier eater of the two, although he is the smaller horse, and he's not as fat as he was. Celt is sixteen hands high and Colin fifteen hands three and a half inches. No, sir, they never give any trouble any time in the stall or out of it or on the track or anywhere. They are like all good race horses in this respect. Colin especially is sweet dispositioned."

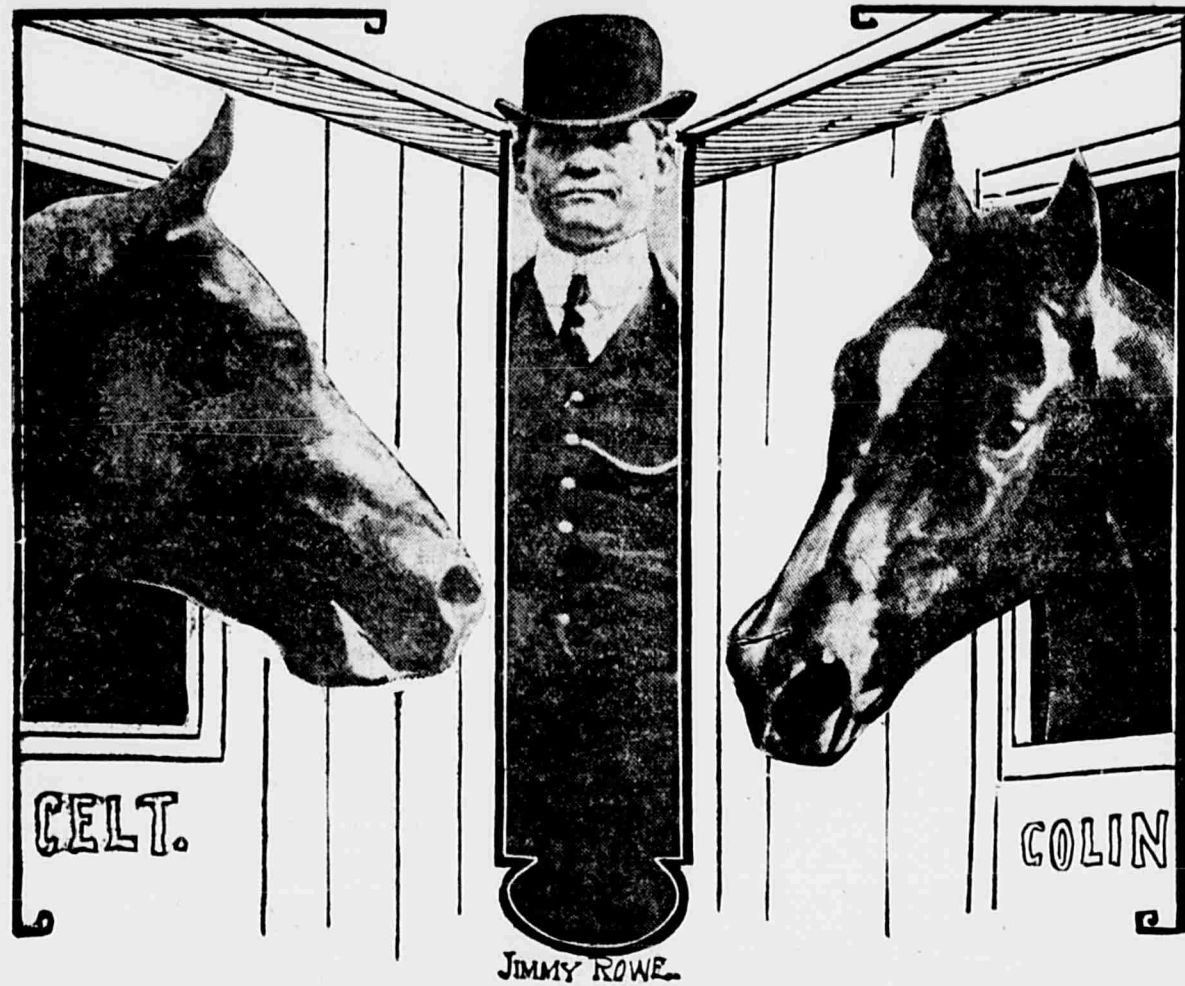

Diplomatic Mr. Rowe.

Mr. Rowe is very cagey about expressing an opinion as to the comparative ability of the two horses. To the question, "Which is the best, Colin or Celt?" he just smiles, and, like Joe Weber used to say to Lew Fields, "talks, but says nothing."

"They're both mighty good race horses," he says, and little more. "Is either Colin or Celt the equal of Synoby?"

"Hard to say," he answers. "Synoby was a fine horse, and so is Colin and so is Celt."

Just the same, Colin has never been beaten, and there is a strong suspicion that he is the trainer's favorite.

days of his fatal illness. That stall, No. 5, is now occupied by Gretta Green, and, while Jimmy Rowe says he isn't superstitious, just the same he wouldn't put Colin or Celt in there. Celt is next to Colin and has No. 7.

Rest if Not Racing.

The stalls are plainly wooden, with no linings or upholsterings, and with a dirt floor covered with straw. After breakfast and bath, Colin and Celt were covered with a light blanket and remained in their stalls. The noon meal is somewhat heavier than the breakfast and consists of about four quarts. They remain quiet after it until about 4 o'clock, when they are taken out by Finch and Baldorf and walked around for a light exercise. During this time stable boys make up their beds, shaking up or putting in fresh straw. Their supper is at about 6 o'clock, and then it's off to sleep until 5 o'clock the next morning.

Rowe always arrives at the stable promptly at that time. "I'd rather have colored help around my stable," says Mr. Rowe. "I tried white men once and they won't do. They war to be always betting or at the races. A negro really loves a horse. That Baldorf has attended only to Colin this year, but he wouldn't swap jobs with the King of England. I had to fire the boy who tended him last year, and it nearly broke the fellow's heart, but he got too shiftless. The Lord knows where Baldorf got that name; they gave it to him around the stable. Finch has been with Celt since he was a yearling and is a good boy."

Don't Like Other Animals.

Before the races or for special work-outs Marshall Lilley, a colored boy, rides Colin and Celt. Mr. Rowe says he is the finest judge of pace he ever saw and would be a great jockey were he not too heavy. He has been with the Keene stable for years. Notter, the jockey who has ridden Colin in all his victories, often exercises him before a big race.

Colin and Celt have none of the peculiarities that less famous horses have.

Vacation Notes

"The Adirondack Mountains, and How to Reach Them" is a 48-page folder describing the charm of the Adirondacks. It contains a fine map of the entire region, a list of 390 hotels and boarding houses, the location of 400 lakes and ponds and the capacity of each hotel, the rate per day and week and other useful information.

"The Thousand Islands, Rideau Lakes and Saguenay" descriptive folder contains an excellent map, 16x18 inches, showing the territory from Kingston and Ottawa to Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. The delights of shore dinners, house-boating, fishing and yachting are all described.

"Two to Fifteen Days' Pleasure Tours" is a 64-page booklet with 84 maps and numerous illustrations, describing more than a hundred delightful vacation tours occupying from two to fifteen days. It also gives you the cost of the trip and the time it takes to make it. A valuable booklet for those seeking a place to spend any portion of the summer, or for a short trip over Sunday at a nominal expense.

"America's Summer Resorts" contains 48 pages and an excellent map of the territory from Bar Harbor and St. John, N.B., on the east, to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo on the west. It describes numerous resorts and gives you an idea of the trip.

AGED COUPLE HANG THEMSELVES IN BARN.

Wright, at 91, Tired of Life—Wife of 88 Couldn't Live Without Him.

HEBRON, Me., June 10.—"I am tired of suffering and my wife doesn't want to live without me," wrote John C. Wright before he and his wife hanged themselves. He was ninety-one and his wife eighty-eight.

Neighbors found the aged couple suspended by the neck and dead in the Wright barn. It was evident that a suicide pact had been agreed upon. Letters left by the couple showed that they were prepared to die together.

Celt is also well named, being by Commando, also Colin's sire, but his dam being Maid of Erin.

STOP DRINKING ALCOHOL, SAYS DR. DARLINGTON.

Health Commissioner Explains Increased Mortality from Heart and Kidney Diseases.

BOSTON, June 10.—"The people of this country are drinking too much alcohol by far."

So Dr. Thomas Darlington, Health Commissioner of New York, told physicians from all over the country at the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the American Climatological Association.

"We need rugged constitutions, indeed, to hold us up in the pace we are travelling," said the Health Commissioner. He declared that while the general death rate is decreasing, mortality from heart disease and its correlated condition, chronic Bright's disease, is increasing steadily throughout the country. Secondly, this increase takes place regardless of climatic conditions, locality or density of population. For Dr. Darlington blamed alcohol largely.

300 PRISONERS ARE PACKED INTO NIGHT COURT

Police Get Busy and Break Records in the Six-Hour Sitting.

Between 9 o'clock last night and 3 o'clock this morning three hundred prisoners were arraigned in the Night Police Court, causing a congestion such as the court has not known since it was established.

The congestion was particularly great in the women's prison room, which is not more than twenty feet square, and which was packed. The women stood so close to each other they had difficulty in breathing even the foul air in the room.

The cells in the back of the court were also jammed. Many held a half dozen prisoners each, and about the Magistrate's desk were throngs which extended out into the corridor and even into the street.

Police who came late with prisoners had to wait outside until a way could be cleared for them by either the discharge or removal of prisoners before the Magistrate's desk.

Most of those arraigned were charged with disorderly conduct. In arresting women the police seemed to have developed unusual activity. There were also a number of peddlers charged with blocking traffic or selling liquor without a license.

JAPAN RAISES MONUMENT TO 14,000 RUSSIAN DEAD.

PORT ARTHUR, June 10.—A monument erected by Japan to the Russian dead at Port Arthur was unveiled here today. It stands at Antzeshan, in the midst of the graves of more than 14,000 Russians who lost their lives in the defense of the fortress. It has taken two years to erect the monument. Thirteen memorials to individuals also were unveiled and dedicated at the same time. Detachments of Japanese and Russian troops took part in the ceremony. The Russian detachment came down from Harbin at the invitation of the Japanese military authorities. The Emperor of Russia was represented by Gen. Gergorov and the Emperor of Japan by Gen. Nogi.
